Careers Event at Haileybury School

Inspiring the next generation

Social Value Case Study

At Danaher & Walsh, supporting the next generation of construction professionals is at the heart of what we do. This is why we attend different careers events to help inspire the next generation who want to know more about construction and civil engineering.

Pat Cummings attended the careers event at Haileybury School yesterday afternoon and had a very enjoyable and productive afternoon.

Inspiring the Next Generation

As a business we were impressed with the level of interest from the students in careers in the construction industry which allowed us to discuss possible career paths, professions in the industry, infrastructure projects big and small including the High Street works, and as an industry the benefits building new, maintaining existing infrastructure across the country and world wide brings to the community.

We had a great discussion on sustainability and the poor image construction can have when it's not understood that we add to the biodiversity of areas in the landscaping plans, and we source only sustainable materials.

Overall, Pat commented, 'I was very pleased to attend, and hopefully, some of the students may now follow a career path into our industry.'
